NATIONAL BREAST CANCER COALITION

About the National Breast Cancer Coalition

The National Breast Cancer Coalition's (NBCC) mission is to end breast cancer. Since its inception, NBCC has revolutionized breast cancer science and public policy advocacy. We take the big, but calculated, risks. We ask the bold, but necessary, questions. And we figure out how to answer them to save lives. Our activism has generated more than 3.6 billion federal dollars for breast cancer research. Our efforts have also brought about new research models, including NBCC's catalytic research program, the Artemis Project®. This program's central priorities are how to stop women and men from getting breast cancer and how to stop them from dying of it. With strong collaborations between researchers and advocates, NBCC awarded seed grants for a preventive vaccine and tumor dormancy research projects; two crucial steps to end breast cancer.

At the 2019 Advocate Leadership Summit we will train a cadre of core leaders to understand the science of breast cancer, develop answers to difficult questions, and rally others in communities across America and around the globe to end breast cancer.
